

Abstract

An emissions control device including an elongate body portion having a plurality of channels which are angularly orientated to each other, and each channel having at least one magnet positioned in the channel, the at least one magnet having a 5 polar axis orientated to create magnetic fields directed at a common site adjacent to the body portion.